Women's wings set up to teach water conservation in Nilgiris

TIMES NEWS NETWORK

Udhagamandalam: In a bid to create awareness about safe-guarding water resources in the Nilgiri hills, the Nakkubetta Foundation, a voluntary organization has formed women's wings to take the message to the villagers.

The organization will travel around different villages spreading word about the cause, furthermore they will distribute saplings of indigenous trees to be planted surrounding the natural water resources as a safe-guarding measure.

According to NNRamakrishna, founder of Nakkubetta Foundation, there are over 300 Ba-daga villages in the Nilgiris. "Back in the days, areas surrounding water bodies would be tended to, but most of the villages neglect to do so."

Most of the members in the women's wings are college students and young working women. Every Sunday they would visit a particular village and conduct meetings.

Native trees like 'Baige' (Neerva, maram- in Tamil) will preferably be planted in the villages, said Ramakrishnan.

"We have visited, at least, five villages, in the past one month. The response is very welcoming and encouraging. People get to understand the importance of water conservation," Suganya, president of the women's wing said.

Most members see it as an act of empowerment and over 400 women have joined in a time-
